GRES has organized various programmes relating to environment as follows:

a. National Environment Awareness Campaign 2008- 2009 theme" Climate Change"

The workshop on National environment awareness campaign workshop was held on the 3rd March 2009 at Community Hall, Srikakulam For this workshop all the Self Help Group members and NGOs have participated .

Th e workshop started with the opening speech by the Mr P.Ramesh Babu Assistant Director , Youth Services welcoming all the participants and the NGOs In his address, he mentioned about The excessive presence of carbon dioxide is warming the planet and driving the global climate change . Most importantly he stated each one of us to "Think globally and act locally", where our small act affects globally. Change in one part brings about a change in the other, a result of which clearly explains that we all are interdependent in terms of every aspect of the environment.

And also expressed his contentment in the active participation of NGOs and SHG group members in this field. He also expressed his gratitude towards NGOs in working for the state and global cause. He urged the them to take up the issue of environment protection, ban on the use of plastic, anti smoking campaign and preservation as well as education of people on these lines consciously and actively.

The technical session was taken over by Mr. Kanna Rao where he talked about the changes that are happening in the environment and the various indicators to this were that there is less snowfall as compared to the previous years. The evidences accounted for were melting of snow and breaking of glaciers, seasons changing prematurely, shifting of vegetation, reduction of migration of people from the colder region to the warmer area during winter. Strong message to the NGOs was to encourage themselves despite meager financial grant-in-aid and act as building blocks in environment conservation in the society.

X.FISHEOMEN COMMUNITY POOGOAMMES FOR WOMEN

The fishermen who depend on the sea face more problems than others. And hence we have concentrated more on marine fisheries than on lake or river fisheries... From the studies we have conducted we observed that catamarans with OBMs have been draining the resources of fishermen with fuel costs, repairs, manhours etc. Fuel used for these OBMs is also ecologically destructive. GRES felt an imperative need to build further awareness on this especially among the younger generation of fishers. Around 60 fishermen and women participated

A. Drying racks:

A huge amount of unsold fish go waste during rainy / festive seasons or when there is a glut. While men catch fish, women dry them in the sandy beach and fish get spoiled because of dust and sand. The unhygienic drying of fish unfit for consumption have a low economic value. Reducing the fish losses and improving the efficiency of post-harvest handling and processing are important concerns that affect fisherfolk's life. Drying is one of the simplest ways to preserve fish. GRES trained women in hygienic drying fish with the help of drying racks , raising their market value substantially . 130 Fisher women participated .

FUTURE PLANS

GRES has a strong faith that little intervention in need makes big difference, thus the success as mentioned above has encouraged GRES with following future programme:

- To organize water resource management programs
- Establishment of Rehabilitation and Care Center for Women in distress
- Establishment of four Water Harvesting Structures to provide irrigation facility to 2000 Hectares of land.
- Plantation of 120 acres of Medicinal plantations
